FLUORESCENT MARKINGS ON BANK NOTES

-- a counterfeit deterrent --

Counterfeiting continues to be a serious problem throughout the world. One of many security devices used to thwart the counterfeiter is the use of fluorescent images. Some of these images are embedded in the paper, others are printed on the note. The black light below enables the eye to see the hidden markings on the notes in this exhibit case.

The first bank notes with fluorescent printing were introduced about 40 years ago.

New U.S. Gold Coins

To compete with other countries that now issue gold coins, the price of which fluctuates based on the daily price of gold, the U.S. Government is now minting four different gold pieces. Although specific denominations have been assigned, the cost of each, as stated previously, could change from day to day.

For purchasing information about these and other world gold coins, see the display on the banking floor of the Mercantile Bank to your right as you leave the museum.

BANK NOTES LIGHT UP AT MERCANTILE MONEY MUSEUM

A selection of bank notes from Bermuda to Venezuela, all with hidden fluorescent printing, has been installed at the Mercantile Money Museum just in time to add light and color to the holiday season.

Bank notes from foreign countries are often extremely colorful, and when some are viewed under a black light, a plethora of numerals, portraits, patterns and designs are revealed. As children most of us were intrigued with secret messages written with invisible ink. The bank notes in this exhibit conjure up those childhood memories.

The use of fluorescent printing is one of many security devices used to thwart counterfeiting, a problem that persists throughout the world. Some of the hidden markings are embedded in the bank note paper, others are printed on the note. The black lights in this special exhibit enable the eye to see the hidden markings on these selected bank notes.

Topical exhibits that remain in place at the Mercantile Money Museum include The Statue of Liberty, 1886-1986; A Tribute to the St. Louis Union Station; and the Jungle of the Apes.

The Mercantile Money Museum, a cooperative undertaking of the Mercantile Bank and the Eric P. Newman Numismatic Education Society, is on the podium level at 7th & Washington, accessible from the St. Louis Centre. The museum is open Monday - Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Groups are welcome; the telephone number is 425-8199.

Note display sheds new light

World paper money has long been acknowledged as more colorful than United States paper money, but a recent display at the Mercantile Money Museum in St. Louis is revealing colors and designs of which even most collectors are unaware.

Hidden fluorescent printing on modern world notes is the theme of the new display, reports museum curator Gene Hessler.

"Bank notes from foreign countries are often extremely colorful, and when some are viewed under a black light, a plethora of numerals, portraits, patterns and designs are revealed," Hessler reports.

"As children most of us were intrigued with secret messages written with invisible ink," he writes. "The bank notes in this exhibit conjure up those childhood memories."

Fluorescent printing is used as an anti-counterfeiting security feature on a number of world notes. Hessler notes that some of the hidden markings are embedded in the paper, and others are printed on the note.

The hidden features on selected notes are revealed to viewers of the Mercantile Money Museum exhibits by special "black" lights used to illuminate the display cases.

In addition to the fluorescent note exhibit, current topical displays at the Mercantile Money Museum include those about the Statue of Liberty, the St. Louis Union Station and the "Jungle of the Apes."

Hours for the numismatic museum are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The museum is located at the Mercantile Bank, the podium level, Seventh and Washington. Hessler may be contacted by telephone at (314) 425-8199.

The museum is a joint venture of the Mercantile Bank and the Eric P. Newman Numismatic Education Society.

FLUORESCENT MARKINGS ON BANK NOTES

—— a counterfeit deterrent ——

Counterfeiting continues to be a serious problem throughout the world. One of many security devices used to thwart the counterfeiter is the use of fluorescent images. Some of these images are embedded in the paper, others are printed on the note. The black light below enables the eye to see the hidden markings on the notes in this exhibit case.

The first bank notes with fluorescent printing were introduced about 40 years ago.
